Course Description

Classical Tibetan Translation Project (TLAN 301)/Advanced Classical Tibetan Seminar (TLAN 401) is a joined third and fourth year Classical Tibetan course aimed at developing and further strengthening students' skills in independent translation of texts from the Tibetan language into English through studying translation methodology and engaging into the guided translation practice.

The class has three main components:

(1) study of the selected readings on translation methodology, textual criticism, source evaluation, and historical contextualization. Students are expected to read the provided material and come to Monday classes ready to discuss it.

(2) In-class readings of the assigned translations. Students are expected to come to each class having prepared their own translations and be ready to read and discuss them.

(3) Independent translation project, i.e., translation of a text that has not been translated into English. Students will be given an untranslated sūtra text to translate from Tibetan into English. The translation project will be structured as two assignments: (a) submission of the draft translation; (b) submission of the final annotated translation with introduction.

The course is focused on the Mahāyāna sūtra and śāstra literature. Translation texts will be assigned by the instructor.

Learning Outcomes

Students can expect to come away from this class with improved understanding of Tibetan grammar and increased vocabulary; a deeper familiarity with Tibetan literature in general and the philosophical genre in particular; and a greater understanding of what is required of a professional translator and the skills to begin working on professional-level translations. This course is particularly well-suited for those who aspire to work as professional translators but is appropriate for anyone from any background who wishes to move their Tibetan reading comprehension and English translation skills to the next level.

Course Requirements

Students will have three types of assignments:
(1) in-class translations and readings ongoing throughout the semester;
(2) a midterm exam and submission of the draft independent translation project in the middle of semester; and
(3) final assessment consisting in the submission of the finalized independent translation project with introduction.

Assessments	Weight
1. In-class translation and discussion	20% of final grade
2. Draft independent translation project	10% of final grade
3. Midterm exam	20% of final grade
4. Final Exam	50% of final grade (finalized translation project: introduction 25% and annotated translation 25%)
